

A large, bold, black Chinese character '日' (rì) is shown at the top. A thick black arrow indicates the downward stroke from the top-left to the bottom-left. Another thick black arrow indicates the curved stroke starting from the top-right, curving down and then back up to the right. Below the character is a grid for handwriting practice. The grid has 5 columns and 5 rows. The top row is shaded light blue. The first two columns of the top row are under the downward stroke, and the last two columns are under the curved stroke. Two small black squares are placed on the top row, one in the third column and one in the fourth column, corresponding to the two dots of the character.
